Summary of reasons for decision:

The publication is a car window sticker which depicts a silhouette of a sexualised image of a woman. The text comprises crude sexual innuendo, as per the title. While some viewers are likely to be offended by the sticker, the test for restriction does not involve offence, but likely injury to the public good. Due to the silhouette graphics, the sexual components of the sticker are not sufficiently overt or strong to make its unrestricted availability likely to injure the public good.

In this instance, where injury to the public good cannot be adequately demonstrated, then a reading in accordance with the New Zealand Bill of Rights Act 1990 is inevitable.
